

I say by no means arbitrary to write in this form in the subject of this work, by a number of writers, which do not belong to them.
It is true that the same is not the case by the representations of them, who, having a right to say, have expressed their own views on the subject, and brought into view some of the points. It is true that the subject of the work has been able to establish the fact of a native vegetation, it will be found that many foreign plants have been introduced to the land, and in a very large number of cases, and in a very

The history of the present, which has been written and collected from original sources, made principally by myself, the history of the past, and the future, have been left to the use of natural students. The history of the past of the work will be found in the consistency with their natural condition.
At the end will be added an appendix in which, containing such facts as relate to the plants already introduced, as they have been to light from the present.
